Aspekt-Press, Russia. Hardcover. 444 pages. ISBN 9785756710830. In Russian. 2020.

The Atlas of International Relations is the first experience of mapping and statistical analysis of the geographical factor in world politics in Russian literature. The purpose of the study was to identify the level of spatial correlation of factors that determine the structure and dynamics of world development. The analysis is based on a database of seventy indicators describing politics, economics, demographics, human capital, values and international influence of all countries of the world. For each indicator, anamorphosis maps were created and basic indicators of spatial dependence in the distribution of the phenomenon were calculated. Further, on the basis of groups of indicators, a multidimensional analysis and clustering was carried out, which made it possible to comprehensively assess the spatial disproportions of the modern system of international relations.

The growth and development of Montana was substantial for the 20 year period that followed 1865, as the roads and railroads penetrated the wilderness. The growth was particularly evident when comparing the 1865 and 1885 maps. The population for the state was increased by over 6 fold. This explains the many new names that appeared in Deer Lodge and Madison Counties as well as the adjoining counties. The Union Pacific served the area from Deer Lodge south to the state line. Please be reminded that early place names that appear may not have been a town site. Some early postal services may have been found in a ranch house, stage station, or a mining camp as well.

California, North, Ghost Towns, 6-Map Set, Then and Now

ISBN: 9780972044110. 2002. In English. 6 sheets.

Northern California Ghost Towns/Sites Then and Now (6 maps, 4 overlays) Early roads and trails are shown throughout this section of the state. The two counties of Klamath and Siskiyou are shown on the northern border. Early trails/roads connected Yreka to Trinidad and Eureka. A main road is shown from Sacramento to the Oregon border. Marysville, Red Bluffs and Shasta City were located on this road. Yreka was bypassed several miles to the east. Numerous roads were shown connecting the early town sites in the mother lode region east of Sacramento and Marysville. Ghost sites may be many things; a town site, a stage station, mining camps or a military camp or fort. What is a ghost? It was described by Norman Weis in Ghost towns of the Northwest as "a quiet place enhanced through the process of still photography". Lambert Florin's description in this book, Oregon Ghost Towns, was "a shadowy semblance of its former self." The reader should be reminded that some of the early place names might have been a post office operated in a ranch house or an early stage station as well as town sites. Some locations were moved from time to time while others changed their names or simply failed.
